*Licensure vs Authorization, What's the Difference?

All secondary instructors in Colorado are required to have either a license or authorization to teach. Schools districts vary in their requirements. Some districts require all instructors to be licensed while others accept those with either a license or authorization. Licensure requires the completion of an approved educator preparation program or alternative teacher licensing program. In addition, licensure applicants must also provide evidence of a passing score for their content area assessment.

In 1991, the state legislature created an Authorization option for instructors in specialty areas not meeting the licensure requirements. The authorization requires the applicant to meet the credentialing/endorsement criteria which does not include content area exam or completion of an approved educator preparation program. Applicants will need to determine which path is appropriate to their specific case and submit either the Initial CTE Authorization Application or Initial Licensure Application.
