

State Advisory Council for Parent Involvement in Education

The State Advisory Council for Parent Involvement in Education (SACPIE) is a 26-member legislated body in Colorado that collects and shares promising family engagement practices from Preschool through Higher Education. SACPIE membership includes parents, education associations, nonprofit organizations, and state agencies.

SACPIE Vision

All students' life goals are met through family, school, and community partnerships.

Overarching Goal

To partner with Colorado's families in reducing dropout rates, gaps in academic achievement and growth among student groups, and in increasing the number of students who continue into higher education following high school graduation or completion.

Meetings

SACPIE meetings are held on the second Tuesday of the month in August, November, February, and May. Meetings are in-person with a hybrid option.

Member Testimonials

"As a parent representative, serving on SACPIE has been a wonderful opportunity to engage with stakeholders across the state. Through sharing resources, learning about promising practices in a variety of areas, and collaborating with others, I have been able to work with my local school districts to help support them in their process of partnering with families and the greater community." - Parent Representative

"Through my work with SACPIE, I have gained countless skills and strategies that have made me more effective as an educator. Every student and community member in my district has benefitted from it." - Colorado Association of School Executives Representative, Middle School Principal

"SACPIE has been extremely helpful in breaking down the silos across state agencies. CDHS is able to build better relationships with school-based practitioners." - Colorado Department of Human Services Representative
