

In the text "A Brick to Cuddle up to" it explains how people in the colonial times had hard times. They were always freezing cause there was no heat in their houses. So any time they went to bed they will burn a brick rabbit and put it in their bed to sleep warm. People in colonial times lives were rough.

P.P (2) In the colonial times people lived in houses with no heat. They didn't invent heaters till the 1800's. People would have done any thing to stay warm. They were creative. People would just have to do what they had to do. People would wear a animal skin coat. Maybe people that didn't wear animal skin coats and freeze to death they probably was not meant to be. People will fight the cold. What is will were hard back then for people the cold was to storage. for them. People will normally warm their icy sheets with the bricks, but sometimes it get to hot and people have to wait till it cools down. In addition, people use a foot stove that had little holes that through out smoke to warm your legs. Foot stoves will usually be used when going to a Sunday or set VICA. Times were horribly for people in Colonial times.

① I thought the meaning of the title things little people go to the ~~car~~ ~~at~~ ~~the~~ ~~rock~~ and brick hit to them, but when I read the article and it was about people using bricks on daily bases and to stay warm. They stayed warm by burning it. I think that because the title doesn't say a lot about the article. Also because what I predicted had nothing to do with the article. The passage is nothing compared to the story. What the title is trying to say is that when it says "A Brick to Cuddle Up to" it doesn't mean to hug a brick. It says that bricks were helpful a lot back then, there a lot of meaning for the article, but not like mine.

Author said a lot about the colonial time and the problems, but I realized the times were hard.